NEW GAL FOR NIFTY

NIFTY WILSON paused in his rapid-fire chatter with the gang just long enough to let out a long, low whistle before he whirled on his heel and started to follow a glamorous, young blonde as she headed for the corner drugstore. "Hey, hold it, hot-shot!" laughed Rocky Martin, as he reached out to stop Nifty. "You don't know that gorgeous fluff and besides, you were just telling us you're off women forever." Nifty shook himself free, still concentrating on the retreating figure ahead of him. "That was a good thirty second ago, friend," he retorted. "You just can't tie a guy down to long-range statements." And he whizzed down the sidewalk in time to hold the door, breathless and panting, for the pretty girl, who smiled up at him.

Inside the store he lolled at the magazine rack while the girl bought cosmetics and then, when she headed for the soda fountain, Nifty slowly sauntered over and sat down beside her. "You're the new chick . . . er . . . girl in Home Room 3, aren't you?" he inquired. "Why, yes," she smiled dazzlingly up at Nifty. He recovered in time to order a couple of chocolate sodas, "You like 'em?" he asked. She nodded. "You see," continued Nifty, only briefly at a loss for words, "I follow you . . . in more ways than one, heh heh." Her lifted eyebrows caused him to rush on, "Alphabetically, that is, in Home Room 3. Your name is Walker and mine is Wilson. I'm Nifty Wilson," he added with pride. "And I'm Gladys Walker," she said softly. "Ah, this is for me," mused Nifty, and he launched on his very best Grade A line, used only on Grade A glamour chicks.

Gladys seemed impressed and by the time they were finished with the sodas, Nifty found himself inviting her to the Friday Nite Hop at school. "Why, that's very nice," said Gladys, "but surely you already have a date for the dance, it's only two days away and . . ." Nifty shook his head emphatically, "Nope! I was waiting for a dream to ankle along and sure enough, you did. So we're all set. Say, can I call you at home tonight, we can talk awhile and get better acquainted." She laughed, "Sure, but we've talked so long now I'm fairly dizzy with facts about you. I really must hurry home." And she left Nifty in the clouds, thanking him for the soda.

Outside, Nifty found his buddy, Rocky, waiting for him and ogling Gladys as she boarded a bus. "None of that, pal," interrupted Nifty, "Gladys Walker is my latest flame." He added in lofty tones, brushing an imaginary spec from his lapel, "Boy when I operate, do they fall! YAHOO! She's also my date for the Friday Hop." Rocky was aghast. "What?

You double-crosser! I deliberately didn't invite anybody to that dance because you asked me to go bowling, spend a night with the boys. Phooey! Now here I am, hung up . . . without a date. And I can't ask any of my regulars because the dance is so near. You traitor." Nifty stared at Rocky sympathetically. "Gosh, Rocky," I never gave it a thought," and he paused, looking pensive. "Lissen, I'm calling Gladys tonight, and . . ." he went on to say that he'd ask Gladys if she could line up a date for Rocky. Gladys, it seemed, came from a nearby town and it would be a breeze for her to import one of her friends. Rocky listened to all this with interest and then, almost reluctantly, he agreed. "Okay, that'll square you."

That night Nifty could hardly wait to call Gladys. She was pleasant as he made his pitch about a date for Rocky, but there she hesitated. "Aw, come on, Gladys," pleaded Nifty, "the Rock's a terrific guy, all the gals are crazy about him. He's good lookin', plays first string football, drives his mother's red convertible. An ideal date for any dish." "Well, my cousin was going to visit us one of these week-ends, maybe she can arrange to come for this one. But I can't be sure, Nifty," she replied. "Sure you can, gal," he said confidently, "I'll give you his phone number and you can call and tell him about your cousin. We just gotta get a date for poor ole' Rocky. I can't leave him behind." Gladys interrupted his flood of words, "All right, Nifty, I'll call him. If that's the way you want it, we'll make sure your friend has a date for the dance."

From then on Nifty relaxed, confident that Gladys would get a date for Rocky and that all would go well. That's why he was surprised when he arrived to call for Gladys on Friday and found Rocky helping her into the red convertible. He sputtered slightly before coming up with, "How come?" Gladys picked up the ball immediately, "But, Nifty, you said you simply couldn't go to the dance and leave Rocky behind and so when my cousin said she couldn't be here, I thought the only honorable thing to do was to go with him myself. Besides, you said that he was such a lovely boy." She smiled meltingly up at Rocky. "No kidding," cut in Rocky, "did you say that pal? What a buddy! That's friendship! I knew I could count on you." And he swatted Nifty briskly on the back. As Nifty staggered under the impact and came up coughing hoarsely, the red convertible roared off into the night. "Friendship," he muttered, "Horsefeathers! I just over-sold the poor girl, that's all." And he swung jauntily along, planning new worlds to conquer.
